Above: Example of an identity web that was constructed in order to create a six word memoir. This memoir is simply six words that reflect something important about your life and who you are.

Below: A haiku poem (5 syllables in first line, 7 in the second, and 5 in the last)

*Family
I love my family
My family loves me too.
~~My family loves me too.~~
"We like to sing songs!"*

What we did to stay cool before air conditioning was invented, We raised the windows in all in the rooms. We kept the front door open which had a screen door. We played outside under the trees. We had a portable fan for the kitchen and a window fan for the living room. We also used hand fans; very seldom! We drink iced tea, and lemonade. We also made home made ice cream.

Right:
I noticed when completing writing prompts participants always mentioned their handwriting. They were asked to write about what their handwriting meant to them.

*Helen Mitchell
My hand writing varies, sometimes good and sometimes not so good. I love to practice hand writing but it always different.*

I started cursive writing when I was 7 years old. I learned later on that you could either left or right. Like (like this, or this way). I love to write. We took notes in school; so we could remember what the lesson was about.

Left:
What did you do to stay cool before air conditioning?

Below:
Dance day! Recalled how to do the hokey pokey, macarena, and other famous line dances. Then reminisced about memories involving dance.
